COLLABORATIVE PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

BibleOdyssey.com and .org (2011 to present), an NEH-funded initiative of the Society of Biblical Literature to create and maintain a major online resource for the general public to find accessible, reliable, non-partisan information about biblical literature and its social-historical contexts. I serve on the Editorial Board and have contributed several video interviews on specific topics.

Translating Alterity (2013 to present), an international collaboration involving the Nida School of Translation Studies of the American Bible Society and the Society of Biblical Literature aimed at exploring means of translation that highlight the alterity of Hebrew and Greek biblical texts (rather than domesticating them, which has been the dominant strategy for centuries). The ultimate objectives are (1) to publish a new edition of the New Revised Standard Version Bible and (2) to develop a digital online platform of the translation. The research working group, “Word Processing: Media in Translation” (fall 2014), funded by the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities (fall 2014), which is an interdisciplinary exploratory group interested in the developing alternative biblical translation strategies in emerging digital media technologies, dovetails with this major initiative’s second objective.

In light of the success of the research working group during the fall of 2014, our group is now moving toward a second phase of research with the grant application “TOHU App: Altering Translation in New Media.” The new goal is to design and build an interactive, scalable beta app that hosts an encounter with the process of biblical translation for college students and other non-specialists. Tentatively named Tohu, this app will be built around the process of translating one small biblical text, the first three verses of the creation story in Genesis 1. With this beta app completed, we plan to seek long-term funding for a complete, fully functional app.

Letterpress project involving biblical translations handset and printed on a POCO #0 proof press using Poliphilus type.

Religion and Democracy in America (2012-13), an academic conference co-sponsored by the American Bible Society and Wheaton College to foster nationwide public conversation on the place and roll of the Bible in democratic society, past, present, and future. From 2011 to 2013, I worked with the American Bible Society and Wheaton College to plan, organize, and host the two-day conference, which took place October 25-26, 2013.

Baker-Nord Seminars (2004-2007). Developed, hosted, and led three semester-long interdisciplinary thematic seminars including faculty fellows from across the university, scholars and artists from other University Circle institutions, leaders from the larger Northeast Ohio community, and high-profile visiting fellows (e.g., Mieke Bal, W.J.T. Mitchell, Avital Ronell, S. Brent Plate, Angela Johnson, Shahram Entekabi, and Myra Bluebond-Langner). The themes were “Homelands and Security” (fall 2004), “Childhoods” (fall 2005), and “Information” (fall 2006). In the spring of each year, we hosted a “Humanities Week” series of special programs related to fall seminar’s theme. Sponsored by the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities with major funding from a Presidential Initiative Grant.

Visual Ethics Symposium (2007). In collaboration with William E. Deal and Brent Plate, planned and hosted a scholarly symposium on “Visual Ethics,” interdisciplinary field that intersects with religious studies, cognitive science, journalism and media studies, and social scientific understandings of the ways humans make sense of cultural identities through images.

Getting Published (2007). In collaboration with Mary Davis, Department of Music, developed and hosted a series of five panels for professors and graduate students on contemporary issues in academic publishing: “Publishing with University Presses,” “Publishing for Trade,” “Before You Sign that Contract,” “Fair Use, Copyright, and Other Nuts and Bolts,” and “New Horizons in Digital Publishing.” Guest speakers included authors, literary agents, and editors from academic and trade presses.

Information (DVD; 2006). Co-produced (with Media Services) a DVD and streaming video of interviews with and lectures by Baker-Nord Seminar visiting fellows W.J.T. Mitchell, Avital Ronell, and S. Brent Plate. Sponsored by the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities.

American Council of Learned Societies programming (2004-2006). Planned and hosted a full day of academic and administrative programming at Case Western Reserve University as part of the ACLS Conference of Administrative Officer in Cleveland, OH in November of 2004. Over the following two years (2005-2006), served as consultant to the CWRU president, Edward M. Hundert, in a series of meetings of the joint Humanities Steering Committee of the ACLS and the Association of American Universities (AAU), convened by him and ACLS President Pauline Yu. These meetings culminated in the ACLS/AAU Humanities Convocation: Reinvigorating the Humanities in Philadelphia on May 12, 2006.

Reinvigorating the Humanities Roundtables (2006). Planned and led a series of three university-wide roundtables on the future of the academic humanities, including faculty members, administrators, staff members, and students in all fields. The results were shared at the ACLS/AAU Humanities Convocation: Reinvigorating the Humanities (May 2006). Hosted by the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities.

Religion, Terrorism, and the Law (2005). In collaboration with Professors Amos Guiora and Jessie Hill, School of Law, and William E. Deal, Department of Religious Studies, planned and co-hosted a two-day interdisciplinary seminar on religion and terrorism.

GLUB (2004). As part of the Baker-Nord Seminar on “Homelands and Security,” helped produce GLUB, a multimedia exhibit exploring aesthetics of human migration created by Shahram Entekabi and Mieke Bal, installed and exhibited during the fall of 2004 at the Art Studio Gallery at Case Western Reserve University. Sponsored by the Baker-Nord Center for the Humanities.

Religion and Culture Symposia (2002-2004). Planned and hosted three day-long interdisciplinary symposia at CWRU’s Manor House at Squire Valleevue Farm. The themes were: “Religion and Globalization” (2002), “Religion on the Brain” (2003), and “Evil” (2004).
