COURSE OUTLINE AND REQUIREMENTS

POSC346/446, Women and Politics, involves a critical examination of the impact of gender on the forms and distributions of power and politics, with primary reference to the experience of women in the United States. Major concerns of the course include what we mean by "sex," "gender," and "politics;" the relationship between women and the state; how women organize collectively to influence state policies; and how the state facilitates and constrains women's access to and exercise of political power.

The course is organized around four foci central to the study of women and politics. The first section of the course focuses on what we mean by “women,” “gender,” and “politics.” In this section, we will consider how these concepts intersect and the ways in which each may be used to deepen our understanding of the workings of governments and political systems, and of women’s relative political powerlessness.

In the second section of the course, we will employ these concepts to understand the gendered nature of elections in the United States. Because 2008 is a US presidential election year, we turn to conventional electoral politics, focusing on women’s candidacies, their campaigns, and women’s voting behavior. In the third section of the course, we consider how women’s election to office might translate into public policy outcomes. Finally, we consider women and politics in global perspective, examining those general factors that might provide for increased gender equality and improved life status for women, in global comparative perspective.

Evaluation of undergraduate student performance in this course is based on the following criteria. First, each student is expected to attend class and to be prepared for each class meeting by having read, in advance, the materials assigned for that day. Students should be prepared to discuss the material in detail in class every day, and all students are expected to participate. Informed participation in class discussion accounts for 15 percent of the final grade. Second, students will participate in a group project, focused on a 2008 US election campaign. The specific campaign and group membership will be assigned by the professor. The group project will involve an in-class presentation (worth 20 percent of the final grade) and a written final paper (worth 25 percent of the final grade). Finally, students will complete two short papers, each of which accounts for 20 percent of the final grade. Details of these assignments will be available in separate course handouts. Due dates for assignments are indicated in the reading schedule, below.

Evaluation of graduate student performance in this course is based on similar but additional criteria. First, graduate students are expected to attend class and to be prepared for each class meeting by having read, in advance, the materials assigned for that day. Students should be prepared to discuss the material in detail in class every day. Second, graduate students will participate in a research project, focused on a 2008 US election campaign. The specific campaign will be identified in discussion with the professor. The research project will involve an in-class presentation (worth 20 percent of the final grade) and a written final research paper (worth 40 percent of the final grade). Finally, graduate students will complete two additional literature review papers, each of which accounts for 20 percent of the final grade. Details of these assignments will be available in separate course handouts. Due dates for assignments are indicated in the reading schedule, below.
