The Department of Psychological Sciences at Case Western Reserve University is seeking applications for a tenure-track position at the rank of assistant professor, associate professor, or professor of Psychology to begin AY 2019-2020. We are interested in experts in any area of clinical psychology. The department offers a Ph.D. program in clinical psychology, in both child and adult areas, that uses a scientist-practitioner model, is highly competitive, and has been continually accredited since 1948. In addition, it offers PhD programs in Developmental, Cognitive, and Affective Sciences and in communication sciences; a CAA accredited master’s program in speech language pathology; and undergraduate programs in psychology and communication sciences. Assistant Professor candidates will be evaluated on their potential to establish a prominent, externally funded research program and to excel in graduate and undergraduate teaching. Associate Professors and Professors will be evaluated on their demonstrated abilities in research (including a history of successful external funding) and teaching. The required teaching load is two courses each semester. Although we will consider all areas of research, we are particularly interested in areas of substance abuse, neuropsychology, diversity, serious mental illness, autism/developmental disorders, eating disorders, and sleep disorders.

A Ph.D. in Psychology is required by the time of appointment, with preference given to candidates who are eligible for licensure in Ohio. Qualified candidates must submit a detailed letter of application, a statement of teaching philosophy, a statement of research interests, and a vita. At least three confidential references must be submitted. Please provide teaching evaluation data and preprints/reprints, if available. Apply to this position at: http://apply.interfolio.com/55766. Review of applications begins November 9, 2018, and will continue until the position is filled.
